

Echoes of Uganda: A Vibrant Celebration of Heritage and Harmony

This engaging event whisks one to the core of Uganda's landscape as it trumpets the electrifying rhythms and colourful customs of this part of East Africa. Located in the most spectacular aspects of nature amongst the people of Uganda, this one-off experience encourages you to peek into the essence of Ugandan music, dance and social life.

As soon as your journey begins, learn about the evolution of Ugandan traditional instruments, starting from the Adungu (harp) and Amadinda (wooden percussion) which have been the core of the country's culture for ages. With their hands in the air, and their bodies clad in wildly adorned costumes, local musicians and performers will come alive to perform different acts and dance to odysseys of euphoria that narrate tales on Uganda. Add the delicious punch of the drums and the romance of the dancers gently swaying and leaping up in perfect unison to the undersized beats, and you have a cocktail spell that is out of this world hammed in the right event.

As the sky darkens, gather round for an alfresco meal and sample a variety of food locally from Uganda. Luwombo is a mouth watering soup that is prepared using a mat and then Luwombo and Matoke, boiled green banana that is very common in the region. The feast itself is entertainment, with music from their instruments, and the warmth of the people of Uganda.

This activity is not just another show – more like a call to that very heart of Uganda. Whether you find yourself clapping to the rhythms, picking up a few dance moves or just standing there and absorbing the ambiance, you will walk away with a larger perspective about Ugandan culture and the people in it.
